Atrial fibrillation (AFib) is a medical disorder that affects the upper chambers, known as atria, of the heart. People with AFib experience irregular heartbeats caused by abnormal electrical signals in the atria. The electrical impulses erroneously circulate through the atria, causing the atria to contract with an irregular rhythm and fast rate.

8 Triggers for Atrial Fibrillation
Introduction. Atrial fibrillation (AF) prevalence increases with age, making it the most common arrhythmia in patients older than 65 years. For patients older than 80 years, the corresponding rate is approximately 10%. 1 Furthermore, 70% of individuals with AF are between the age of 65 and 85 years.
