Along side the automatic functions common to the genre of cameras the Konica Hexar best fits into, it features aperture priority and even a full manual mode. On top of this, it also offers a few extra options often lauded as "hidden" features that unlock its potential. Unfortunately for the Konica Hexar, I don't see it like that.

Picking a few holes in the untouchable – A Konica Hexar review

Konica Hexar AF The Ultimate Available Light Fixed Lens Point & Shoot. The Konica Hexar AF is a wonderful available light candid camera, yet deceptively simply and deceptively complex. In some ways it has no peer, justifying its "cult" camera status as the ideal stealth street camera. High points include a fast sharp lens combined with ...

Konica Hexar AF - CameraQuest

The Konica Hexar RF was pretty much the last analogue m-mount rangefinder I hadn't shot with, and one of only a couple I hadn't reviewed. It's a camera I have been recommended a fair few times over the years I've been running this blog. But with it being entirely battery dependent and ...

Camera Geekery: Konica Hexar RF review - Japan Camera Hunter

The Konica Hexar RF meters for exposure either by aperture priority auto-exposure (with AE lock and +/-2EV exposure compensation) or in metered-manual mode. Aperture priority is selected by setting the shutter speed dial to either the AE or AE lock position. Manual exposure is set by selecting a specific shutter speed on the shutter speed dial (there is a central interlock button to prevent accidentally moving the dial from the AE modes to a manually selected shutter speed).
